

Citing Your Sources

Monday, October 3, 2010

While reviewing your research have you ever found yourself asking, "Where did I get that piece of information?" We all know we should document our sources, but we don't always do it. Some of us think we will remember where something came from and others are avoiding what seems like a tedious and boring task, but many of us are just so confused about how to write citations correctly that we don't even make the attempt. Well, no more excuses! This class will remind participants why it is important to document sources and teach them the basics of how to write source citations.
